STATUS – READ BEFORE USING

This sheet was built from the live sales page, its on-page testimonials, category knowledge and light web research. The Deep Research pass has not been run. Every quote in the language sections is constructed — written to sound like the avatar, not harvested from a real woman.

Do not paste any constructed quote onto the site or into an ad as a customer testimonial. When the research doc returns, swap each one for a real, sourced quote and this becomes a v2 you can write from with confidence.

[E] evidenced [I] inferred [C] constructed language

01 Demographic & general information

AGE RANGE	38–58, buying core 43–52 . Under 38 she's buying prevention and glow, not correction, and price-shopping The Ordinary. Over 58 she has usually either made peace with her face or already gone to a clinic. [/]
GENDER	~95% female. The small male slice is gift purchases — Christmas, birthdays — not self-use. [/]

LOCATION

Sweden, split between the three metros and mid-sized towns — Västerås, Örebro, Linköping, Uppsala, Jönköping, Sundsvall. The mid-sized town buyer is likely the better customer: no accessible aesthetics clinic, fewer friends doing injectables, so "professional results at home" solves an access problem and not just a price problem. [1]

INCOME & SPEND

Household 35 000–55 000 kr/month gross; personal skincare spend 300–800 kr/month. She will pay 349 kr for something she believes in — but it is a considered purchase, not an impulse one. She reads the whole page. [1]

OCCUPATIONS

Undersköterska or sjuksköterska, teacher, förskollärare, office administration, HR, retail management, hairdresser, care work, self-employed. Overwhelmingly working women with practical jobs — not a luxury demographic. [1]

IDENTITY

Mother of teenagers or newly-adult kids. Married or divorced, often 10–20 years into one or the other. Works full time, runs the household's logistics. Says she "sköter sig" but is honest that she's tired. Buys at Lyko, Apotea, Kicks, Skincity. More active on Facebook than Instagram — which is where your ads reach her. Perimenopause is live for the 45–52 core, and she may not have connected it to what her skin is doing. [1]

02 Key challenges & pain points

1 · Pores and texture — the thing she sees first

- Her pores, especially on the nose and cheeks, look larger every year, and nothing she buys makes them smaller. [E — the Instagram comment and lead testimonial on your own page are both pore-first]
- Foundation stops sitting smoothly after a few hours; it settles into the pores and the lines around her mouth, so makeup makes the problem more visible by lunchtime.
- Her skin looks fine in the mirror and bad in photos — particularly the front camera, particularly under the flat overhead light at work.

2 · Lost firmness and looking tired — the thing that actually hurts

- The jawline and cheeks have softened. Nothing has "fallen," but the face she sees isn't the one she carries in her head.
- Lines on the forehead, between the brows and around the mouth now stay visible at rest, not only when she smiles.
- Colleagues, her mother, her kids read her as tired or stressed when she isn't. This is the wound. It isn't about beauty — it's about being misread.

3 • Product fatigue and distrust — the reason she doesn't buy

- She has a drawer of half-used serums that promised exactly what yours promises. [E]
- She can't reliably tell a real product from a dropshipped one, and she's been burned or knows someone who has. Swedish consumers are unusually alert to this. [I]
- She is specifically afraid of retinol — peeling, redness, purging — and she has a job where she faces people. She cannot afford two weeks of a ruined face. [E — this is the single most-answered objection on your page, four separate times]

03 Goals & aspirations

SHORT-TERM • 1–3 MONTHS

1. To see one visible thing change — usually the pores on her nose — so she can believe the rest is coming.
2. To get through a workday without her makeup breaking up, and to leave the house some mornings without a full base at all.
3. To find one product that works and then stop researching, stop scrolling, stop buying. The search itself is exhausting her.

LONG-TERM • 1–5 YEARS

1. To age in a way she chose rather than one that happened to her — "look like myself, rested," never "look 30."
2. To never need injectables. Not necessarily because she judges them, but because she wants to stay on the right side of a line she has drawn for herself.
3. To feel unremarkable in a photograph — to be in the picture with her kids instead of the one taking it.

04 Emotional drivers & psychological insights

The gap between inside and outside.

She doesn't feel 47. The mismatch between how she feels and how she is read is the actual pain — the pores are only where it shows.

She wants relief, not seduction.

Copy written by men in this category defaults to "feel sexy again." That is not her driver. Hers is the absence of a negative: not being commented on, not being asked if she's tired, not flinching at a photo.

Jantelagen cuts both ways — the Swedish-specific insight.

She wants to look better, but she does not want to look like she has tried. "Gjord" is an insult; vanity is faintly embarrassing to admit out loud. That makes a home routine emotionally safer than a clinic: nobody sees her go, nobody knows, and the result reads as "hon ser pigg ut" rather than "hon har gjort något." Discretion is your least obvious advantage and possibly your strongest.

She is a compliance risk and she knows it.

She has abandoned routines before. Your week-by-week roadmap works on her precisely because it tells her what failure will look like — the purge — before she experiences it and quits.

Price is not the real objection.

349 kr is less than a dinner out. The objection is "another 349 kr wasted," which is a belief problem, not a money problem. The guarantee answers the money. Only the mechanism answers the belief.

05 The language

Swedish first, English underneath. Every quote here is written, not found — the placeholder shape of what the research has to replace.

GENERAL CUSTOMER VOICE

CONSTRUCTED

"Jag är inte ute efter att se ut som 25 igen. Jag vill bara se ut som mig själv, fast utvilad."

I'm not trying to look 25 again. I just want to look like myself, but rested.

"Jag har en hel låda med serum som jag använde i två veckor och sen gav upp på."

I have a whole drawer of serums I used for two weeks and then gave up on.

"Alla säger att jag ser trött ut. Jag är inte trött. Jag ser bara ut så nu."

Everyone says I look tired. I'm not tired. That's just how I look now.

PAIN POINTS & FRUSTRATIONS

CONSTRUCTED

"Porerna på näsan har blivit som krater. Sminket lägger sig i dem efter en timme."

The pores on my nose have turned into craters. Makeup settles into them within an hour.

"Jag ser helt okej ut i spegeln och sen ser jag ett foto och undrar vem det är."

I look perfectly okay in the mirror, then I see a photo and wonder who that is.

"Jag vågar inte testa retinol. Jag jobbar med människor, jag kan inte gå omkring och flaga."

I don't dare try retinol. I work with people – I can't walk around peeling.

ALREADY ON YOUR PAGE

The only two customer-voiced lines you currently own. Treat as brand-authored until you can verify them — but note that both lead with pores, which supports the pore-first read above.

"Testade allt mot mina stora porer och fina linjer... porerna på näsan är MÄRKBART mindre och skratlinjerna nästan borta. Ångrar bara att jag inte köpte den tidigare 😊" linnea_h85 · Instagram comment block, buy box

"Jag har känslig hud och var rädd för retinal. Det svider lite i början men lägger sig snabbt."

Ann L. · on-page testimonial, 9 mars 2026

MINDSET

CONSTRUCTED

"Jag har inget emot att åldras. Jag vill bara göra det på mitt sätt."

I don't mind getting older. I just want to do it on my own terms.

"Botox är inget för mig. Jag vill inte se gjord ut."

Botox isn't for me. I don't want to look done.

"Om något faktiskt fungerar så håller jag i det. Problemet är att inget har gjort det."

If something actually works I'll stick with it. The problem is nothing has.

EMOTIONAL STATE & PERSONAL DRIVERS

CONSTRUCTED

"Jag känner mig inte 47. Det är bara ansiktet som inte hängt med."

I don't feel 47. It's just my face that hasn't kept up.

"Jag vill kunna gå ut och handla utan att lägga på ett lager foundation först."

I want to be able to run to the shop without putting on a layer of foundation first.

"Jag är den som tar korten. Jag är aldrig med på dem."

I'm the one who takes the pictures. I'm never in them.

EMOTIONAL RESPONSES TO STRUGGLE

CONSTRUCTED

"Jag skäms nästan över hur mycket pengar jag lagt på krämer som inte gjort någonting."

I'm almost ashamed of how much money I've spent on creams that did nothing.

"Man ger upp till slut. Man tänker att det är väl bara så här det ska vara nu."

You give up in the end. You think, well, I suppose this is just how it is now.

"Min kollega är 52 och har perfekt hud och jag vet inte vad hon gör. Jag vågar inte fråga."

My colleague is 52 and has perfect skin and I don't know what she does. I don't dare ask.

MOTIVATION & URGENCY

CONSTRUCTED

"Om jag inte gör något nu så blir det bara svårare sen."

If I don't do something now it only gets harder later.

"Jag har bröllop i juni. Jag vill se ut som mig själv på bilderna."

I have a wedding in June. I want to look like myself in the photos.

"Jag är trött på att vänta på att någonting ska funka. Jag ger det åtta veckor och sen vet jag."

I'm tired of waiting for something to work. I'll give it eight weeks and then I'll know.

06 Key emotional fears & deep frustrations

That she'll be visibly wrecked for two weeks and everyone at work will see it.

The purge fear is the single thing standing between her and the buy button — and it is a social fear, not a medical one. Answer it socially.

That she is being taken for a fool again.

Another Meta ad, another 349 kr, another bottle in the drawer. Every unsupported claim on your page feeds this fear instead of answering it.

That it's simply too late for her

— that pores and lines at 47 are just age, and no cream changes age. This is the belief the mechanism has to break, and it's why "de som burit på porer och linjer längst ser ofta den tydligaste skillnaden" is the best sentence currently on your page.

07 Emotional & psychographic insights

She is solution-aware but mechanism-starved.

She knows what retinol is; she's read the articles. What she has never been given is a credible reason why this one reaches where the others didn't. The 200 000 microneedles is that reason — and it should be the loudest thing on the page, not the fifth section down.

She trusts specificity and distrusts enthusiasm.

Swedish consumers are unusually hype-resistant. "93% saw results!" reads as advertising. "Vecka 1 kan du få små utslag — det är normalt, det går över" reads as honesty, and honesty is what converts here. Your willingness to describe the bad weeks is a conversion asset. Lean harder into it.

She will buy the routine, not the bottle

— but only after she believes the routine works. Which is why the 1/2/3-pack ladder is right, and why it should be argued after the proof rather than presented as a discount before it.

08 Typical emotional journey

A real sequence — each stage has to be reached before the next one lands, which is why the order of the sales page matters as much as its content.

01

Awareness

It's a photo, usually. Someone tags her, or she opens the front camera by accident in bad light. She sees the pores on her nose and the lines around her mouth and registers, with a small drop in her stomach, that this is what other people have been seeing.

She doesn't act. She just starts noticing — in shop windows, on video calls, in the car mirror.

02

Frustration

She starts buying. A serum from Lyko, something a colleague recommended, a sheet mask, an expensive cream at Christmas. She uses each one properly for two or three weeks, sees nothing, and drifts. The drawer fills up.

She starts to suspect the whole category is a con — and, simultaneously, that the problem might be her: her genes, her age, her skin. The frustration turns inward, which is why it goes quiet. She stops mentioning it.

Desperation

Something forces the issue: a wedding, a milestone birthday, a divorce, a photo she can't unsee, a friend who suddenly looks great. She googles botox prices in her town, and either the number or the needle stops her. She reads about prescription retinol and finds the peeling stories.

She wants the result those things promise without the cost, the needles, or the two ruined weeks. This is the exact moment your ad reaches her — and why "professionella resultat hemma, skonsamt nog för känslig hud" is the right core promise: it's the only sentence that resolves all three constraints at once.

04

Relief & commitment

She buys. Week one her skin tingles and she nearly stops — this is where you lose or keep her, and the roadmap is what keeps her. Somewhere around week two or three she notices her nose in the bathroom mirror and it is smoother, and that small verifiable win converts her from a buyer into a believer.

From there she stops evaluating and starts maintaining. She tells one or two people, quietly, and only if they ask what she's doing — because she'd rather they simply think she looks well.

09 What changes when the research lands

1. Every constructed quote is replaced with a real, sourced one. That alone makes this sheet usable for writing headlines.
2. Research sections 1.5 and 1.6 — what she blames, what she judges — confirm or break the jantelagen insight, which is currently the load-bearing assumption in this entire document.
3. Competitor one-star reviews sharpen "Key emotional fears" from three items into a ranked list with evidence behind each.
4. The Swedish language bank replaces guessed phrasing with her actual vocabulary — above all, whether she says "stora porer," "trött hud," "slapp," or something neither of us has thought of.
