

Harvest, don't summarize

The full research brief: 8 sections, 30 questions, and the rules that stop it coming back as a summary.

How to use. Paste everything from ROLE onward into Deep Research as a single prompt. The rules block is load-bearing — the 60% Swedish-source floor and the no-invented-data rule are what separate a usable dossier from a well-written summary.

ROLE

You are a senior direct-response market researcher. Your job is NOT to write copy and NOT to summarize the internet. Your job is to go into the places where real women talk about their skin and HARVEST THEIR EXACT WORDS, then organize those words into a research dossier that a direct-response copywriter will use to write a sales page.

The single most important rule: I do not want your paraphrase of what the market thinks. I want the market's own language, copy-pasted verbatim, with a link to where you found it. A research doc full of your summaries is a FAILED deliverable. A research doc full of real quotes from real women is a successful one.

THE TARGET CUSTOMER (verify and correct this — do not just accept it)

Assumed: women in Sweden, roughly 35–60, most likely 40–55, middle income, concerned with enlarged pores, fine lines/wrinkles, loss of firmness and dull skin. Likely has already tried multiple serums and creams. Likely has NOT had botox or fillers, but has considered them or has opinions about them.

Part of your job is to CONFIRM OR CORRECT this profile with evidence. If the real market is older, younger, or splits into distinct segments, say so and show me the data.

NON-NEGOTIABLE RULES

- 1 VERBATIM ONLY. Every insight must be supported by at least one direct quote, copied word for word — spelling mistakes, slang, typos, caps, emoji and all. Do not clean up, do not translate into "proper" language, do not smooth the grammar. The mess IS the value.
- 2 EVERY QUOTE GETS A SOURCE. Include the platform, the thread/product/page title, a direct URL, and the date if visible. A quote without a link is unusable to me.

- 3 SWEDISH QUOTES STAY IN SWEDISH. This product is sold in Swedish to Swedes. Swedish-language voice-of-customer is the highest-value material in this entire project. When you find a Swedish quote, reproduce it in Swedish, then add an English translation in brackets underneath. Never replace the Swedish with the translation.
- 4 AIM FOR AT LEAST 60% OF ALL QUOTES TO BE FROM SWEDISH OR NORDIC SOURCES. English-language sources are for mechanism, science, competitor intel and objection patterns. Swedish sources are for emotional language. If you cannot hit 60%, tell me explicitly which Swedish sources you tried, what you found, and why the yield was low — do not silently pad the doc with American quotes.
- 5 RECENCY. Prioritize sources from the last 36 months (2023–2026). Older material is allowed for historical/curiosity sections only. Flag the date on everything.
- 6 NO INVENTED DATA. Do not estimate, extrapolate, round up, or generate a plausible-sounding statistic. If you cannot find a number with a citable primary source, write "not found." A gap you flag is far more useful to me than a number you invented. I will be putting these claims on a live commercial page in the EU and I can be fined for them.
- 7 QUANTITY MATTERS. I would rather have 150 raw quotes lightly organized than 15 quotes beautifully analyzed. Volume of real language is the deliverable.

WHERE TO LOOK (work through these systematically)

Swedish / Nordic — HIGHEST PRIORITY:

- Reddit: r/sweden, r/svenskaskincare, r/SweFashion and any Swedish skincare threads
- Flashback Forum — Skönhet & Kropp / Hud sections
- Familjeliv — beauty, health and "kropp & själ" forums
- Swedish retailer reviews (read 5-star AND 1-star, both matter): Lyko, Skincity, Apotea, Kicks, Nordicfeel, Bangerhead, Eleven, Åhléns
- Trustpilot Sweden — reviews of skincare brands and DTC beauty brands, including complaints

- Swedish beauty blogs, YouTube and TikTok comment sections on retinol/retinal content
- Swedish women's media comment sections: Amelia, Femina, Baaam, MåBra, Aftonbladet Hälsa
- Meta Ad Library (search Swedish skincare/anti-age advertisers) — read the PUBLIC COMMENTS on competitor ads, which are pure unfiltered market reaction

English-language, for mechanism / objections / competitor intel:

- Reddit: r/SkincareAddiction, r/30PlusSkinCare, r/Retinoids, r/tretinoin, r/AsianBeauty, r/SkincareAddictionUK
- Amazon (UK, DE, US) reviews of retinal/retinol products — sort 5-star and 1-star separately
- Trustpilot and Reviews.io for Medik8, Avène, Paula's Choice, The Ordinary
- Beauty forums, Substack skincare writers, dermatologist YouTube comment sections
- PubMed / peer-reviewed literature for retinaldehyde and spicule/microneedle delivery

THE RESEARCH QUESTIONS

Answer every one of these. Each answer = your finding + the verbatim quotes that prove it.

SECTION 1 – THE CUSTOMER

- 1.1 Who is she really? Age, income, life stage, region, family situation, occupation. Cite data where it exists. Identify whether there are 2–3 distinct segments rather than one.
- 1.2 What are her attitudes — social, economic, cultural? Specifically for Sweden: attitudes toward spending on beauty, toward "naturligt" vs "gjord", toward jantelagen and standing out, toward vanity and admitting you care about your looks. This last one matters enormously for tone in the Swedish market — investigate it properly.

- 1.3 What are her hopes and dreams — NOT "younger skin." I want the real ones, at the level of "I want my husband to look at me with pride." Find the posts where a woman explains what she actually wants from her face and what it would mean to her. Minimum 10 verbatim quotes.
- 1.4 What are her victories and failures with her skin? Where has she succeeded and where has she given up? Find the confessional posts. Minimum 10 verbatim quotes, weighted toward failures — failure language is what makes a sales page feel like it was written about her.
- 1.5 What outside forces does she blame for her skin? (Age, genetics, hormones/perimenopause, the sun in her twenties, stress, kids, sleep, smoking, "min hud är bara sån", money, the Swedish winter, hard water.) Rank these by how often they appear and quote each one.
- 1.6 What are her prejudices and stereotypes? What does she think about women who get fillers and botox? About expensive clinics? About influencer skincare? About "for old ladies" branding? About cheap Chinese/dropship skincare? Quote the judgments verbatim — these are landmines and levers at the same time.
- 1.7 Summarize her core beliefs about life, love, family and her own appearance in 1–3 sentences, written in her voice, in the first person. This is the single most important paragraph in the whole document — build it out of the quotes above, not out of your imagination.

SECTION 2 – EXISTING SOLUTIONS

- 2.1 List every solution the market is ALREADY using for pores, fine lines, firmness and dullness. Be exhaustive: drugstore retinol, prescription tretinoin/Differin, vitamin C, niacinamide, AHA/BHA, hyaluronic acid, sheet masks, LED masks, at-home microneedling/dermarollers, facial massage/gua sha, botox, fillers, skin boosters (Profhilo), laser, IPL, microneedling at clinic, chemical peels, HIFU, collagen supplements, diet, sunscreen. For each: rough price in SEK for the Swedish market.
- 2.2 What does she LIKE about each of these? Verbatim quotes. (These are the benefits I must claim too, in my own copy, or she'll think I'm offering less.)

2.3 What does she DISLIKE about each of these? Verbatim quotes. Go especially deep on:

- prescription retinoids: peeling, redness, "retinoid uglies", the weeks she couldn't face anyone
 - botox/fillers: cost, needles, the frozen look, having to repeat forever, fear of a bad result, being judged
 - clinics: price, booking, downtime, upselling, feeling talked down to
 - drugstore serums: "I used the whole bottle and nothing happened" Minimum 20 verbatim quotes across this question. This is my differentiation ammunition.

2.4 HORROR STORIES. Find real, documented, sourced stories of these solutions going wrong: botox complications and dropped eyelids, filler migration, infections after at-home or clinic microneedling, chemical burns from peels, severe reactions to prescription retinoids, scams and non-delivery from dropship skincare brands. Give me the story, the source, the date and the link. Only real, verifiable stories — no composites, no dramatizations.

2.5 Does the market BELIEVE existing solutions work? If yes, I have to work harder to differentiate. If no, WHY not — what specifically made her cynical? Quote the cynicism. Pay particular attention to women who say some version of "jag har provat allt" — collect every variant of that sentence you can find.

SECTION 3 – CURIOSITY

3.1 Has anyone tried to solve wrinkles, pores or skin ageing in a genuinely unique or forgotten way? Look for lost/rediscovered approaches, unusual historical methods, techniques that worked but got buried.

3.2 Older attempts, pre-1960, at anti-ageing skincare — what did women actually use, what happened, was it successful and forgotten, or a failure and why? (E.g. the history of vitamin A in dermatology, the 1930s–50s cosmetics industry, radium and lead-based cosmetics as cautionary tales.)

3.3 The origin story of retinoids specifically: how vitamin A acid was discovered, how tretinoin was found to smooth wrinkles by accident while treating acne, why retinaldehyde exists as a separate molecule from retinol and tretinoin, and why it stayed relatively obscure in consumer skincare while retinol got all the marketing. If there is a "the better molecule that nobody marketed" story here, document it with sources — that is a potential hook.

3.4 The origin and science of spicules / microneedle delivery: where the technology came from, how it got into cosmetics (K-beauty), what it actually does mechanically. Cite real sources.

SECTION 4 – CORRUPTION / "WHY IT'S WORSE NOW"

4.1 Is there evidence that skin ageing, pore problems or skin quality genuinely got worse in recent decades or generations? Look for real research: UV exposure patterns, air pollution and PM2.5 effects on skin, blue light, chronic stress and cortisol, ultra-processed diet and glycation, sleep deprivation, hormonal factors, microplastics. Sourced only.

4.2 What are the real, documented economics of the aesthetics industry? Specifically:

- What is the actual repeat-purchase model of botox/filler clinics (treatment intervals, lifetime customer value, typical Swedish clinic pricing)?
- How much of a premium skincare product's price is formula vs marketing/packaging/margin?
- How does the beauty industry's marketing rely on planned dissatisfaction?
Document with credible sources — industry reports, financial data, journalism.

IMPORTANT CONSTRAINT: Do NOT build a conspiracy narrative and do NOT invent suppression stories. This product is sold in the EU under consumer protection and cosmetics regulation and I need angles that are TRUE and DEFENSIBLE. A verifiable fact about clinic economics is worth ten unfalsifiable claims about a cover-up. Flag anything you find that is popular online but not actually evidenced.

SECTION 5 – MECHANISM AMMUNITION

5.1 Retinaldehyde specifically: what is the peer-reviewed evidence for its effects on wrinkles, photoageing, pore appearance, skin firmness and tolerability? How does it compare to retinol and tretinoin in conversion steps, potency and irritation? Give me real citations with study names, sample sizes, durations and effect sizes. Note the "11x faster than retinol" claim that circulates in marketing and tell me whether it traces to an actual study or not.

5.2 Spicules/microneedle cosmetic delivery: what does the evidence actually show about penetration depth and delivery efficiency? What are the documented side effects and complaints?

5.3 Peptides and panthenol: what is the real evidence for peptides on elasticity/firmness, and for panthenol on barrier support and irritation reduction?

5.4 For each claim currently made on the Bellenoor page below, tell me: SUPPORTED, PARTIALLY SUPPORTED, or UNSUPPORTED, with sources — and if unsupported, give me the strongest defensible version of the same claim:

- "Krymper porerna"
- "0,1% retinaldehyd är kraftfullt nog för resultat, milt nog för känslig hud"
- "200 000 mikronålar / partiklar fem gånger mindre än en por"
- "16 gånger tunnare än dina porer"
- "Resultat inom 1–2 veckor på porer, 4–8 veckor på fina linjer"
- "Dermatologiskt testad"

5.5 THE CRITICAL QUESTION: what is the honest, evidence-based answer to "why would this work when the last five things she bought didn't?" That answer is the mechanism, and it is the hinge the entire sales page turns on. Give me the strongest TRUE version of it.

SECTION 6 – COMPETITORS

6.1 Identify the 8–12 products this customer actually compares against in the Swedish market. At minimum investigate: Medik8 Crystal Retinal (the direct retinaldehyde comparator), Avène RetrinAL, The Ordinary Retinal 0.2%, La Roche-Posay Retinol B3, Paula's Choice retinol, Skinome, ACO, Lumene, Kicks own-brand, plus any Swedish DTC brands running Meta ads in this category.

- 6.2 For each: price in SEK, size, active and concentration, main claim/headline, guarantee, offer structure (single/subscription/bundle), and where it's sold.
- 6.3 For the top 4, mine their reviews properly. Pull the most common praise and the most common complaint, with verbatim quotes from both 5-star and 1-star reviews. 1-star reviews of my competitors are the most valuable single source in this entire brief — they are a list of the promises I can make that my competitors are failing to keep.
- 6.4 What angles are Swedish skincare advertisers currently running on Meta? Check the Meta Ad Library. What hooks, what claims, what creative formats, what offers? Which angles look saturated and which look unclaimed?

SECTION 7 – OBJECTIONS

- 7.1 List every reason this customer would NOT buy, ranked by how often it appears. Include at minimum: price, scepticism ("nothing has ever worked"), fear of irritation/purging, fear of sensitivity, "is this just another dropship scam", not knowing the brand, uncertainty about how long a tube lasts, delivery/returns worry, uncertainty about whether she's too old or too young for it, and worry about sun sensitivity.
- 7.2 For each objection, give the verbatim quotes where real women express it, and note how the best competitors answer it.

SECTION 8 – THE LANGUAGE BANK (DELIVER THIS AS A STANDALONE APPENDIX)

- 8.1 A raw, uncurated list of at least 100 verbatim phrases from Swedish-speaking women about their skin — pores, wrinkles, sagging, dullness, ageing, mirrors, photos, makeup, feeling tired-looking. Keep them in Swedish. Group loosely by theme. Do not polish them.
- 8.2 The specific words she uses for the PROBLEM (e.g. "stora porer", "apelsinhy", "trött hud", "slapp", "livlös", "fina linjer", "gubbstreck") and for the DESIRED STATE (e.g. "glow", "fräsch", "utvilad", "spänstig", "slät"). Rank by frequency. I need to know which word she actually uses, not which word a marketer would choose.

8.3 The 20 most emotionally loaded sentences you found anywhere in this research — the ones that made you stop reading. These are potential headlines and ad hooks.

8.4 Metaphors and comparisons she uses naturally when describing her skin.

DELIVERABLE

Compile everything into a single, well-structured research document.

- MINIMUM 6 pages — and to be clear, I mean 6 pages of substance, roughly 4,000+ words minimum, not 6 pages of whitespace and headers. Longer is better. If the material supports 15 pages, give me 15.
- Structure it with the section headings above, numbered, so I can navigate it.
- Use tables for: existing solutions and prices, competitor comparison, claim-by-claim substantiation, and objection ranking.
- Every quote in a blockquote, followed by the source and link on its own line.
- Section 8 (language bank) as an appendix at the end — this is the section I'll use most, so make it long and make it raw.
- Open with a 1-page executive summary containing: the corrected customer profile, her core beliefs in her own voice, the top 5 emotional drivers, the top 5 objections, the single strongest defensible mechanism, and the 3 angles you'd bet on. Everything in the summary must point back to a section number.
- End with a "GAPS AND CAUTIONS" section: what you could not find, which claims on the current page you believe are legally or reputationally risky in the Swedish/EU market, and what I should verify before publishing.

HOW I WILL JUDGE THIS

Good: I open the document, read 20 quotes in a row, and start hearing my customer's voice in my head. I can write a headline directly from Section 8 without changing a word.

Bad: I open the document and find your summary of what women "generally feel" about ageing skin, with three quotes and a lot of confident prose.

Harvest, don't summarize. Go.
